ABOUT THE WASHINGTON JOURNAL OF SOCIAL & ENVIRONMENTAL JUSTICE

The Washington Journal of Social & Environmental Justice (WJSEJ) at the University of Washington School of Law publishes legal scholarship examining how communities interact with each other and the environment with the goal of highlighting injustice and encouraging positive social change. Adhering to principles of equity, diversity, and representation, the Journal identifies challenges, posits solutions, and amplifies the voices of those most affected by injustice. This mission is achieved through the collaboration and professionalism of our members, and the continued input from external advisors.

The Journal began in 2009 as the Washington Journal of Environmental Law & Policy. 2023 marks the second year of publishing under our new mission and title.
