Ballot Measure Summary
This measure would change the number of registered voter signatures required to be filed with a petition to seek elective office where the candidate lacks sufficient assets to pay the filing fee for the office. The required number would be: 500 signatures for a statewide office, 200 for U.S. representative, and 50 for any other state or local office. The measure would require candidates to file affidavits if their claims of indigency were challenged.

Ballot Measure Summary

The President is elected through "electoral college" votes cast by electors appointed from each state. This bill enters Washington into an agreement under which each state enacting the agreement will appoint presidential electors who are pledged to support the candidate receiving the largest national popular vote, instead of the candidate receiving the most votes in that state. The agreement would take effect only if states holding at least a majority of electoral votes enact it.

The $141 million center, a focal point of state history, is still in the design stage. It was scheduled for completion in 2012, but because of financial shortfalls the project has been put on hold for one or two years by the Legislature.

It's easy, during this torrid lull, for naysayers to start picking away at the project. There are those who would like to completely torpedo the Heritage Center.

That's why it's incumbent for people such as Gov. Chris Gregoire, Secretary of State Sam Reed, Sen. Keren Fraser, D-Thurston County, and other advocates who have grasped the vision to maintain their optimism and continually promote the Heritage Center as an important next step for the Capitol Campus.

The center, which will be built on the bluff overlooking Capitol Lake on the northern edge of the campus, will be a focal point for campus visitors to start their tour.

They will learn about the history of the Washington Territory and the important events and people that have shaped Washington since statehood.

Go to most any community and there is a library or museum or civic center where visitors can learn about local history.

That's missing from the Capitol Campus.

While architects are about 80 percent completed with their design plans, the Heritage Center will combine State Archives, the State Library and State Capital Museum offices and exhibits. The state-of-the-art facility will offer interactive displays and colorful images from Washington's comprehensive collections. The center will provide citizens with centralized access to state and local history. And through links with TVW, the state's public affairs network, history lessons will be available to thousands of classrooms across the state.

"The Heritage Center will outlive all of us and safeguard our history for generations to come," Reed said. "I firmly believe we have a responsibility to protect our history and make it accessible to everyone."

The Heritage Center project has enjoyed broad, bipartisan support. The vote to build the center was 45-1 in the Senate and 85-15 in the House.

Then the economy went south.

The center relies on a $2 charge on filing real estate transactions and a $5 fee on incorporation filings by businesses to pay for the project. Those fees slid dramatically when the economy slipped into recession.

Gov. Gregoire tried to save the project by including $28 million in her construction budget request to lawmakers. But in the end, legislators decided to delay the project for one, perhaps two years. It's now scheduled for completion in 2013 or 2014. "We're holding firm on our existing plan," Reed said. He's also been lauding the state encouraging private donors and community leaders to maintain their support for the Heritage Center.

Sen. Fraser, who has championed the project alongside Reed, said, "The vision is still there. But what we need is for the economy to come around and then the fee revenue will come around."

Meanwhile, lawmakers want to take advantage of the delay to take a closer look at the project. They included money in the budget to reconsider the building plans and make sure they match the amount of fee money coming in.

This is still a very worthwhile project which has a reliable funding source. The center will add immensely to the knowledge of all those individuals who visit the state Capitol Campus — including the more than 70,000 school children who come here annually. What better place for students and adults to learn state history and see government in action? The Heritage

To All State Records Keepers,

Each state agency is an important part of the state and its history. It is essential that the archival records of state agencies be preserved. The archival program is people dependent, therefore your understanding, cooperation and support in preserving the historical record is essential. Without your help the job will not be done, and much of the historical record will be lost, inadvertently destroyed or ultimately will disintegrate. We hope you will view preservation of the archives not just as a legal requirement but as an important cultural responsibility in which you can actively participate and support.

Mission Statement

The mission of the Washington State Archives is "To centralize the archives of the state of Washington, to make them available for reference and scholarship, and to ensure their proper preservation." (RCW 40.14.020). To accomplish this mission, the State Archives is authorized to inspect and appraise all state government records for archival value. Additionally, the State Archives designates which records shall be transferred to the Archives, preserves those records as a public trust, and ensures that all citizens have free and ready access to those records under the provisions of the law.

Legal Authority

"All public records, not required in the current operation of the office where they are made or kept. . . shall be transferred to the state archives so that the valuable historical records of the state may be centralized, made more widely available, and insured preservation." (RCW 40.14.030). Under the terms of the law, all state government agencies are obliged to submit their records to the State Archives for review and possible inclusion in the archival collections when the agency which created those records no longer needs them for day-to-day operations.

The State Archives serves as the archival repository for all state government agencies. However, state agencies share responsibility by providing for the preservation of historical public records until such time as they can be transferred to the Archives, and ensuring that such records are transferred to Archives in a timely manner.

Public Records Defined

"The term 'public records' shall include any paper, correspondence, completed form, bound record book, photograph, film, sound recording, map drawing, machine-readable material, or any other document, regardless of physical form or characteristics, and including such copies thereof, that have been made or received by any agency of the state of Washington in connection with the transaction of public business." (RCW 40.14.010).

Essentially, all documentation produced by or received by any government agency, regardless of form and including electronic records, are "public records." This includes the records of agency directors and members of boards and commissions.

Purpose of the Archives and Archival Collections

The purpose of the Archives is to document the history, organization and functions of Washington State government agencies and their impact on the lives of citizens. The archival collections consist of over 100,000 cubic feet (around 250 million documents) of records that document many aspects of the history of the state and activities of state government. The collections date from the establishment of Washington Territory in 1853 to the present. Included among them are the papers of each governor, legislative records, court records, records from all state agencies, and all of the "official records" of the state, including governors' proclamations, executive orders, election results, and the laws as passed and signed.

"To centralize the archives of Washington." Researchers from all over the world rely on the Archives for information about Washington, its government, and its citizens. To best serve them, it is essential that the information be centralized and not scattered in various locations statewide, which is why state agencies may not establish and operate their own individual "archives."

Public records must always remain in government custody. They may not be donated to organizations such as libraries, museums or historical societies, and government employees under penalty of law may not take them home. Public records are the property of the State.

"To make them available for reference and scholarship." The Archives employs professionally trained staff dedicated to helping researchers find and understand state government records. This guarantees the best possible service to the public.

"To ensure their proper preservation." All records deteriorate, whether they are paper, electronic, optical images, photographs, or other media. The Archives operates a records conservation lab that employs techniques to preserve records, and all of the most important historical records in the custody of the Archives are stored in special temperature/humidity controlled vaults which extends the life of records many times over.

To provide continuity of care and continuing access. The State Archives is established by law to take care of the state's historical records and is equipped and staffed to do so. Generally state agencies do not have the facilities, equipment or people with the time or professional archival training to do archival work, and a change in staffing or agency outlook can often result in the neglect or even destruction of records.

Appraisal and Collection Policy

The purpose of archival appraisal is to select those state government records that document the functions, programs, and activities of state government agencies. To achieve this, the Archives has the legal mandate to collect records from every level of government which will serve the purpose of documenting Washington's history. It is the policy of the State Archives to collect historically significant records from all branches and agencies of government, including the executive, judicial and legislative branches.

Evidentiary Records: The kinds of records that merit inclusion in the Archives are those which provide essential evidentiary information on state agency functions. The Archives seeks to acquire those records which are the primary records of how citizens are governed, managed, or otherwise relate to public institutions over time. Examples of records which are traditionally appraised as "archival" for their evidentiary value include: records designated by law as having permanent historical value; records which best reflect the mission, goals, programs, functions, and organization of state agencies and programs; and records that provide the most accurate, understandable, accessible and succinct sources of information. Additionally, the State Archives also collects records that have "intrinsic" value, based upon the physical form of the record, its uniqueness, or other factors arising out of its creation or use.

Informational Records: In addition to documenting the functions of state government, the Archives is also responsible for preserving records that have valuable information for a variety of researchers. For example; the legal community in establishing legislative intent; genealogists seeking to find out about their ancestors; citizens seeking records to document and safeguard their rights; historians seeking primary historical source materials of all kinds; and state agency officials researching the actions and activities of their agencies in the past.

Typical Archival Government Records:

- Executive level correspondence and subject files
- State agency annual/biennial reports
- Primary documentation of state government programs
- Meeting minutes
- Studies
- Research reports
- Public affairs office files

Non-Government Records: In addition to government records, the State Archives collects records derived from other sources which may augment government records collections or otherwise shed light on government policies or activities. These may include the papers of legislators, private papers of former government officials, private collections of documents and manuscript materials, working files, studies, and publications featuring government activities.

The Archival Appraisal Process: Archival appraisal is a multi-step process which begins with the analysis of state agency Records Retention Schedules by the State Archives Appraisal Committee. Records may be re-appraised later after their transfer to the archives and prior to their disposal. In some cases only a portion of the records are saved for archives. State agencies are kept informed of the archival status of the records which they have created, and if it is determined that the "archival" status of a record needs to be changed they are consulted.

Once records have been designated as "archival" they are earmarked for eventual transfer to the State Archives. When the state agency that created the records no longer has a current administrative, legal or fiscal need for such records (as defined in the agency's records retention schedules), they must be transferred to the State Archives. The maximum length of time a state agency may retain archival records is fifty years, but usually the retention period is much shorter. If an agency is required by law to keep certain records permanently (such as board minutes), the State Archives assumes the responsibility for such requirements.

Ownership of Transferred Records

All records created, collected or maintained by state agencies are the property of the State of Washington and the public that paid for their creation. The agency that creates or maintains the records is the legal custodian of the records until such time as they are transferred to the Archives or destroyed.

Records transferred to the Archives come under both the physical and legal control of the Archives. The Archives can decide, after careful consideration and in consultation with the agency of origin, to weed, sample or dispose of records that have been transferred. The final decision as to which records are to be preserved forever by the State Archives is up to the State Archivist and staff.

Records transferred to the Archives are open to the public for research under the terms of the Public Disclosure Act with no further reference to the agency of origin. They may be researched and copied, but they may not be removed from the Archives.

Agencies are not charged a box storage fee for records transferred to the Archives. Instead, their maintenance and storage are paid for out of the Archives and Records Management Revolving Fund, which is not based upon the number of boxes stored.

Access to Records

Public records transferred to the Washington State Archives are open for inspection and examination by the public unless prohibited by specific statute or restricted under the terms of the Public Disclosure Act (RCW 42.17). All records that have been transferred to archival custody are available to researchers on equal terms of access. The Archives does not grant privileged or exclusive use of materials to any person or organization. Records that are in the custody of the Archives must be used and copied on site at the Archives. They may not be removed for any purpose unless special arrangements have been made or they are subpoenaed into court.

Differences Between the Archives and the Records Center

Often when people speak of "archiving" their records or sending their records to archives they are really speaking about the State Records Center. Although both the State Records Center and the State Archives are part of the Washington State Division of Archives and Records Management, and although the jobs of both sections are to store records and provide reference services, there are several fundamental differences.

State Records Center:

- Serves as an off-site storage facility for state agency records
- Only stores records which have Records Retention Schedules and have not yet reached the end of their retention period
- Only allows the agency of origin access to the records
- Checks records back out to the agency of origin upon request
- Charges the agency of origin for storage based upon the number of boxes stored
- Assigns each box a unique bar-code number for inventory control, tracking and reference

State Archives:

- Only stores records which have historical value
- Only takes in records which have completed their retention period (or in some cases, records which were never scheduled)
- Allows access to anyone, under the terms of the Public Disclosure Act
- Does not check records out except under very special circumstances
- Does not charge for box storage
- Catalogs its holdings by subject, content and origin

Transfer and Disposition of Archival Records

Records designated as, "archival" on the Records Retention Schedule, are determined by the State Archives as having continuing historical significance. They must be transferred to the Archives at the end of their retention period. If the records are first sent to the State Records Center for temporary storage prior to the expiration of their retention periods they must be accompanied by an Archival Box Content List. This is important, for when the boxes reach the end of their retention periods they will be transferred directly to the Archives where the Content List will be essential in the cataloguing process.

Transfer Procedures for Archival Records

Records are transferred to the State Archives either directly from the agency that created them or via the State Records Center.

Direct Transfers: State agencies may transfer archival records directly to the State Archives if they have reached the end of their retention periods or if they are records with historical value which have never been scheduled. The records must be boxed in records center boxes and the boxes must be labeled. An Archival Box Content List must accompany the boxes.

Records from the Office of the Governor, Office of the Lieutenant Governor, the House of Representatives and the State Senate are always transferred directly to the State Archives.

Transfers from the State Records Center: When the end of the total retention period of archival records stored at the State Records Center has been reached the Records Center automatically transfers those records directly to the State Archives, informing the agency of origin of the transfer. In order to catalog the records into the Archives system it is essential that the Archival Box Content List has been prepared.

Preparing the Records for Transfer

Records designated for transfer to the Archives should be placed in file folders upright in records center boxes. They should be in the order in which they were originally used. Do not put hanging files in the boxes. If the records are being sent to either the Records Center or the Archives, the Archival Box Content List needs to be prepared.

Instructions for Filling Out the Archival Box Content List

The Archival Box Content List is used to transfer records directly to the Archives and also is placed in the box when sending archival records to the Records Center, which will later be transferred to the Archives. Records designated as "archival" which are being shipped to the State Records Center will require both the Records Center Transmittal and the Archival Box Content List.

1. Leave the top set of boxes blank
2. On the next set of boxes fill in: Agency Name, Office Name, name and mail stop of the person sending the records.
3. In the next section, leave Location blank, fill in Box Number, Record Series and File Titles, and the Inclusive Dates.

After the boxes have been received and accessioned by the Archives, a copy of the Archival Box Content List will be mailed back to the agency of origin.

Supplies, Shipping, and Referencing

Supplies: Boxes, labels, and Archival Box Contents List forms may be ordered from the Archives by calling 586-1492. The Archival Box Content List may also be downloaded as a Word document at our web page at www.secstate.wa.gov/archives. If you wish you may replicate the forms as closely as possible on your own computer.

Shipping: Once the boxes are packed, labeled and the forms are prepared, call the Archives for a records pickup at 586-1492. Records are generally picked up within three working days.

Referencing Records: Requests for access to records stored in the Archives may be arranged by calling the State Government Records Section at 586-1492. The records may be researched and copied at the Archives.

Reference service can be expedited by referring to your copies of the Archives transmittal forms and supplying the Archives with the Accession Number, Box Number, File Name, and Location.

History of the Washington State Library

The first American library north of the Columbia River, the Washington State Library was established by the Organic Act of the Territory of Washington passed on March 2, 1853. This act provided for $5,000 to be spent on books for the territorial library. The first Territorial Governor, Isaac Ingalls Stevens, selected and purchased over 2,000 books with those funds. He had also asked for documents and published archives from the executives of each state and territory of the United States and from a number of learned societies. One month before Governor Stevens arrived in the territory, 1,850 books had already been placed on the shelves. Another 2,000 followed, shipped around Cape Horn. Most of the original collection consisted of law textbooks and law reports and a sizeable number of science books. However, novels were also included, as were five mounted maps, and terrestrial and celestial globes. These materials were the core of the collection until Washington became a state in 1889.

According to the Organic Act, the library was "to be kept at the seat of government." As the seat of government moved, so did the library. The first books to arrive were stored in an Olympia warehouse. They were subsequently moved to a room in a one-story building between 2nd and 3rd Avenue on the west side of Main Street (Capitol Way) that had been rented by Governor Stevens from Father Pascal Ricard of the Oblate Mission. In the fall of 1854, the library was housed in a building located at the corner of Fourth Avenue and Main Street in Olympia, presided over by the first librarian, B.F. Kendall. It was later relocated to the first Old Capitol building, which stood near the present-day Legislative Building. It remained there until 1891 when it was moved to the McKenny Building (again on the corner of 4th and Main). In 1901 the collection was moved to the Old Capitol Building on South Washington Street. The library was moved yet again in 1917 to the basement of the Temple of Justice where it remained until 1959 when it was moved to its next home, the Joel M. Pritchard Library, located south of the Legislative Building. In 2001 the library was moved to its current home in Tumwater at Point Plaza East on Capitol Boulevard.

In the first librarian's report to the Territorial Legislature in December of 1854, there were 2,130 books in the library. Only about 12 books were added to the general collection and 8,000 to the law collection between 1853 and 1859. By 1892 there were 16,000 volumes. By 1906 the law library collection numbered 26,000 volumes, covering 4,152 feet of shelving. At that time the general collection occupied 1,300 linear feet, bound papers covered 792 feet of shelving, and the reference section covered 2,700 linear feet. In 1907 legal materials (including items from the original territorial collection) were moved to the State Law Library. At the time of the library's centennial in 1953, the collection exceeded 270,000 volumes, 200,000 of which were newspapers, documents, and magazines. By the late 1990's, the library had reached 547,854 volumes and still retained 750 items from the original territorial collection.

The Washington State Library has promoted numerous services throughout its history. In 1905 it became a clearing house for old magazines and collected issues indexed in Poole's and the Reader's Guide from libraries in the state. In 1933, the Legislative Information Service was made available at the library to help Washington lawmakers to prepare bills for the Legislature. In carrying out its mission to preserve the state's written record, the Washington State Library began the Washington Author Collection in 1940 and in 1952 began to microfilm early state newspapers. Currently the Washington State Library offers historical and government resources relevant to the general public, professionals, researchers and students, provides consulting, administrative, and other services to aid the planning and development of libraries in the state of Washington, serves as a Regional Federal Depository Library and Washington State Publications Depository.
