Colonel Anderson, of Vancouver Barracks, in speaking before the ministerial association in Portland a few days ago on the responsibitity of army chaplains in relation to the frequent desertions of enlisted men, declared this was a thing which chaplains were powerless to remedy, adding, that, in his opinion, it was the result of defective home training, which failed to impress youth with the sacredness of a contract and a proper regard for the individual word or oath. Col. Anderson has stated therein one of the great causes of army desertion. The deserters have no regard for the sacredness of an oath, and have less regard for their duty in the matter. They are generally a worthless act.
